AN AUTUMN DAY-

The earth Hes wrapped in peace; upo her from The isotols of the fruitful year an prescod; Triumphast and clatestill seems she now, As one who glad, yet weavy, dreams of rest.

The sun, his useful ardor wisely spent Floods all the day with tender, maile light, That crowns, with smiling, well deserve Sere reaped meadows and ray wooded hight.

Upon the sir's soft breath the gossams: Gnost of a blossom hither and thither flies; All insect life, with pisinly lessened stir. Pursues its little aimless industries.

Close by the fences, in still country ways
The plumage of the crimson sumac
shines;
From tree and shrub with every zephyr sways The fairy drapery of scarlet vines,

As though the summer, when her reign was o'er,
Fleeling, usurped and wounded, through the wood,
Added unto her giving one gift more,
And glorided them with her own heart's blood.

Far out upon the little lake the trees Cast lengthening shadows; swaying branches nod Unto their fair reflection; overy breeze Kisses the gtory of the golden-rod.

And over all the lowing sky leans low, And seeing all the beauty mirrore there, Itself most fair, smiles wonderingly, a It had not dreamed the world was half

THE TWO GRAVES. A Tale of Passion and Frontier

When Carson saw the terrible and fatal effects of his shot, he made no attempt to escape, but dismounting from his borse he let it go where it would and sat himself down by the side of the body of his victim. All excitement and passion seemed to have left him, and quiet as a status he sat gazing upon his early friend. Dacras lay upon his back, his paire face looking up to the blue canopy of face looking up to the blue canopy of his work, chart of partly by the angered his brow, cansed partly by the angered his brow, cansed partly by the angered his brow, cansed partly by the angered his fatal measurement and partly by the pairs of discolation. were may be imagined, but never described. He was crushed, powerdescribed. He was crushed, power-less and passionless. In that awful moment of alony and guilt, the generous fieliggs and desires of his early life came over him, and how gladly would be have undone the work of his hands. But it at was now impossible. We have it in our power to rob the human carket of its jewel, life, but once taken, we never can replace it. An action once performed our history, is ineffectable. We may blot and blor the page, but still the dark shade is there and should teach us the proper value of wisdom and carefulness of action in the future.

There was great doubt and per plexity in the minds of the emigrants. A doring, bloodthirsty, brutal crime had been committed, yet the law and had been committed, yet the law and that passed through his soul, prostrating everything before it. Manand ponish the perpetrator. It rested with them to see justice administered to the delinquent. But it was not without many and serious on ingrivings that they came to a final decision. It is a terrible thing to take a human life, even though that life may have been forfeited to the outraged laws of our country. No generops, warm hearted man desires to sit upon a jury which has to coasign a human being to death. This is the case even when all is legal and in accordance with the law of the land; how much more is it so when they have taken the law into their own hands? But there is a higher they have taken the law into their own hands? But there is a higher and nobler principle in human nature than a mere inclination. It is such an one. Better, indeed, were than a mere inclination. It is such an one. Better, indeed, were than a mere inclination. It is such an one that passion should thus gain the ascendancy. Slowly the svening sun decined to words the west and circumstances must bend to it. It is that principle which defeeds the right—which principle which defeeds the right—passed among the trees and wanhound small which averages the innocent that the offering to justice should be made. Though all exter oal show of excitement was enhaled, yet traces of anxiety were visible upon the faces of the men and tears were not altogether restricted upon the part of the women. When will a woman not show compassion? It is in her inmost nature and we respect and inone her for it. It was a woman fed Mungo Park when homelass, destitute and starving in Africa.
